Stephen Salisbury's father, Max, had emigrated from Poland as a boy of 12, to avoid being conscripted into the Russian army. He settled in Glasgow, taken in by kinsmen. He later married and had four sons, of whom Stephen was the second.

Stephen's ambition was to become a doctor. When he was 13, his mother died, leaving his father to raise his sons alone. His brothers left school and worked so that Stephen could go on to attend medical school.

In 1942, Stephen attended the school of Tropical Medicine in Liverpool. While there he met Judith, and on his return from military service in Africa they married. They honeymooned in Llandudno and stayed with Stephen's aunt Leah Lazar, who had a Jewish guest house.

They fell in love with Llandudno and decided to settle there. Stephen bought into a medical practice, joining Arthur Madoc Jones. He later joined Drs Roy Smith and Cecil Conyngham. His surgery was attached to the family home on the corner of Carmen Sylva Road and Mostyn Avenue. They stayed in Llandudno until 1975, when they moved to Liverpool to be near their family. Stephen died in 2000.
